Law Day Shabbat May 5, 2018

Law Day Shabbat, a joint project of Temple Israel and the Wilkes-Barre Law & Library Association, will be held on May 5, 2018 starting at 9:30 am in the Sanctuary. Law Day Shabbat serves to underscore the positive role of attorneys in the secular and religious community. We know that the law has a central role in Jewish society for it is written in Deuteronomy 16:20 "Justice, justice shalt thou pursue."

Johanna Gelb and Barry Dylor, co-chairs of the program, are pleased to announce that this year marks the 16th anniversary of this unique program. We are particularly pleased that Judge Geoff Moulton will be our featured speaker.

Geoff Moulton currently serves as Counsel to the Pennsylvania Supreme Court. From August 2016 through December 2017, he was a judge on the Pennsylvania Superior Court, having been nominated by Governor Tom Wolf and unanimously confirmed by the Pennsylvania Senate. During his time on the court, he authored over 330 opinions.

Mr. Moulton has devoted the bulk of his career to public service. Following his graduation from Columbia Law School in 1984, where he was managing editor of the Columbia Law Review, he served as a law clerk on both the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit and the United States Supreme Court. After his clerkships, he spent a total of eight years as a federal prosecutor in Philadelphia, including four years as First Assistant United States Attorney.

In addition, Mr. Moulton has been chief counsel to a United States Senator, chief of staff at the office of the Special Inspector General for the Troubled Asset Relief Program, and first deputy general counsel to Governor Wolf. He also represented media clients in private practice and taught for many years at Widener University Delaware Law School on a wide range of subjects, including Evidence, Criminal Law, Criminal Procedure, and Professional Responsibility.

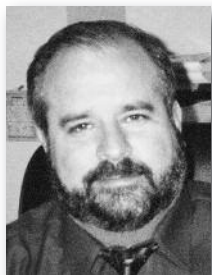

Finally, in the course of his pre-judicial career, Mr. Moulton directed two major independent investigations, one of the ATF raid on the Branch Davidian Compound in Waco, Texas for the U.S. Department of the Treasury, and the other of the investigation of Jerry Sandusky for the Pennsylvania Office of Attorney General.

Mr. Moulton's wife Lisa has been a special education teacher in the Jenkintown School District for 24 years. They live in Upper Dublin Township in Montgomery County and have two grown daughters.

Rabbi Kaplan Writes...

I know I already did a de-brief of our Israel trip last month. But as Pharaoh's servant said to the king before sharing with him Joseph's ability to discern the meaning of dreams, ET CHATA'AI ANI MAZKIR HAYOM- "My sins I must recount today". In last month's Chronicle I suggested that I had nothing to complain about (from my sciatica pain) since we had Marilyn Bartikowsky and her friend Bob Altman on our trip. I said Marilyn was in her late 80's and Bob was 92. But I was wrong. Marilyn is an extremely young 85 and Bob a mere youngster of 91. When one is blessed with that many years, it's no blessing to have someone add additional years to one's age! And so I publicly apologize. The fact is each of them is in better shape than me!

And since we're on the subject of our Israel trip, we stayed at the Inbal hotel in Jerusalem. An Inbal is the clapper of a bell, and the hotel sits on the edge of Liberty Bell Park. Not the Liberty Bell Park racetrack I recall from growing up in Northeast Philadelphia. It's the park with a replica of the original Liberty Bell which the city of Philadelphia donated to the city of Jerusalem in honor of the American bicentennial in 1976.

It was in front of that hotel, next to that park, that Lee Glassman's daughter, Kim, stopped by to visit our tour group before her father took us on our day's excursion. Since Kim had spoken to our congregation before, while she was visiting her grandmother who lives in Scranton, I asked her when she'd next be in the States, and when she told me at Passover time, I immediately asked her to come and speak with us. So Kim and her father Lee visited with many of our tour participants and a few others from the congregation a week after Passover ended. What she shared was memorable, and I need to share it with you.

The question many people, especially many Jews might ask is given the nasty and volatile neighborhood Israel is in, why would young Israelis choose to remain in Israel when it would be so much safer to move to America and raise their family here. We have no draft while Israel has mandatory army service. We have very limited anti-Semitism, and the spate of "incidents" involving hundreds of bomb threats to Jewish community centers last year turned out to be the fault of a disgruntled former boyfriend who was trying to embarrass his girlfriend, and the majority of the fake threats came from a mentally disturbed Jewish teen, who ironically happened to be living in Israel at the time he hacked into a robocall system. In other words, American Jewish parents generally do not fear that their children will be attacked by terrorists.

So why do the vast majority of the Israelis stay and thrive in Israel? I'll share two reasons I culled from Kim's talk. One is that Israel is where Judaism makes sense. Passover, for example, is the holiday of Springtime. Our weather during Pesach in March this year was the holiday of snow- some of the most severe nor'easters in recent memory! And a few weeks earlier, on Tu B'Shevat, the New Year for the Trees, we sang in Hebrew School (with snow in the parking lot) a song about the almond tree blossoming. But in this picture where Kim meets us at our hotel just a few weeks after Tu B'Shevat, you can clearly see the almond trees blossoming behind her! In other words, according to Kim, all the things she learned about Judaism in Scranton never made sense, until her family moved to Israel where it all makes sense.

The second story she told was how everyone in Israel is family. And if not family, you're treated as family. Even if you are a complete stranger. She left her apartment one chilly morning (it would be warming up to a very nice day in a few hours, but she had an early delivery to make before work) and was waiting at the bus stop carrying a pile of old books in her arms. A woman at the bus stop (whom she had never seen before) tells her that Kim should have the books in a bag, not carrying them loose in her arms. And it was chilly out and she should have a sweater on. Another woman comes to the bus stop. This woman also tells Kim (whom she's never seen before) that she should have the books in a bag, and that it's chilly out and she should have a sweater on. And the first lady (who didn't know the second lady) says to the second lady, "That's what I told her!" They get on the bus. As Kim moves the books in her arms to get her bus pass, the driver says "You should have those books in a bag." And then he takes his lunch out of the bag it was in, and puts her books into that bag and hands it to her. And then he tells her, "And you should be wearing a sweater!"

There's a song in Israel called "Rak B'Yisrael" which means, "Only in Israel." It's true. These things only happen in a place where everyone feels that everyone else is a member of their family. Maybe only a very distant cousin, but still close enough to tell a perfect stranger that she should have a bag for her books and she needs to wear a sweater when it's chilly.

It's true that moving your family from Jerusalem to America might make them a little bit safer (depending on which city you move to). But it's simply not worth leaving behind five million family members.

At the end of the evening, which was filled with similarly wonderful stories by both Kim and Lee, Kim gave us slips of paper with her Scranton grandmother's name and email address. She asked us to drop her a line to tell her that we learned something from her granddaughter who was visiting us from Jerusalem. So now you've learned something from her granddaughter too- so here's her name and email. Send her a note so she can shep some nachas.

Cantor's Notes

Cantor Ahron Abraham

In the first chapter of Genesis the Bible instructs us to be responsible caretakers of the world – to use the earth and to have dominion over it, but to treat the world and its resources with respect. In Deuteronomy Chapter 20, in a discussion about the rules of warfare we are commanded: "When you are attacking a town and the war drags on, you must not cut down the trees with your axes.

You may eat the fruit, but do not cut down the trees. Are the trees your enemies, that you should attack them?"

Respect for our environment is seen in the modern State of Israel's aggressive reforestation program and their amazing strides in irrigation and land reclamation. This sentiment was expressed by Kim Glassman (daughter of Lee Glassman, our Israeli tour guide) when she spoke at the Israel trip reunion in April. She mentioned how Hezbollah terrorists specifically targeted forests in the northern part of Israel because they knew the strong emotional and physical connection Israelis feel to the trees they've literally planted with their own hands. This passion for the land seen in modern Israelis dates back to the Zionists who came to Palestine at the beginning of the 20th century. They planted cedar trees where none had grown for 2000 years; imported eucalyptus trees to drain the swamps; worked incredibly hard and in many cases gave their lives to do what no one thought could be done – they brought a land that was considered dead and gone back to life. Israelis have infused the Biblical principles of caring for the earth with new meaning. They've set an example for countries all over the world.

As Jews, we need to explore every aspect of what it means to be Jewish, not just relegate our Judaism to attendance at services. On a very cold Sunday afternoon in April, a group of stalwart Temple members (including Rabbi and me) visited the Lehman Sanctuary, a nature preserve in Shavertown owned and curated by our member, Chris Miller. The sanctuary is a unique area of wetlands, old forest, natural meadow/grazing land and prime wildlife habitat. Hiking through the woods, observing the wildlife, experiencing the forest and hearing Rabbi tie in Judaism's environmental connections was a unique experience, and we thank Chris for providing that for us. We plan to do similar programs in the future (hopefully with better weather), and I encourage you to take part.

From Our President. . .

Robert Greenwald

"We cannot solve our problems with the same thinking we used when we created them."

~~Albert Einstein

Not that we have such problems... or that something was done wrong in the past, but we do have challenges ahead of us. These challenges have more to do with the evolution of our society than anything else. As a Board we've been investigating and planning and talking through our visioning process and bold statement development. We are now in our implementation phase which often requires change and we all know change is difficult.

These changes and the approaches to our challenges will define our future. It means that we have to be creative in our approach to our future. We have to involve people differently and we have to invest time and money to support our goals. It's not going to be easy or without stress. What worked for my parents doesn't work for my children. Clearly we need to be engaging our next generations in the manner they need or want us. Our touches with them need to be with ideas and material that speak to them and are what they want and need.

One example would be the Machzor that the Worship Committee is considering. There are many features that make it an attractive addition to our High Holiday Service. There are the transliterations we would expect and meaningful explanations of the prayers. In my eyes, most importantly we would have the Matriarchs included in our worship. It recognizes the vital force that women are and have been in our families and traditions. Rabbi Kaplan sent out examples for comment and I hope that many of you shared your views. Sure it will cost money to purchase the new Machzors but we need to keep moving forward and improving to be significant to the next generations.

I've been impressed with the work that the Finance Committee has been doing under the leadership of Attorney Jeff Yelen. They have taken the task of making our dues structure more consistent and fair. The committee asked tough questions and thanks to the members who responded, we were able to produce this new plan. The plan gives structure to what was mostly arbitrary.

As you see it unfolding shortly, please keep in mind that foremost to the process was the fact that we value everyone's membership at Temple Israel. Each and every person is important and helps to create the soul of our Temple family.

Robert Greenwald
